

Listening to Orcas on your phone

Now, you can annoy your co-workers with an entirely new kind of ringtone.

The Center for Biological Diversity -- a non-profit that is devoted to protecting endangered species -- has begun offering free ringtones from the calls of about 40 animals, including the Beluga whale, the Oregon spotted frog and the Western burrowing owl.

Sick of hearing Public Enemy or The Clash on your phone? Try the Blue-throated Macaw whose loud cackle is sure to notify all in the vicinity that an important call is waiting.

The animal ringtones are provided through Myxer, not to be confused with Seattle ringtone provider Mixxer.

Posted by  John Cook John Cook at December 18, 2006 2:01 p.m.

Category: The odd side of tech