

Center for Biological Diversity to Disburse Endangered Species Condoms

Submitted by Raoul Girard
Wed, December 26, 2012

The Center for Biological Diversity has been raising warnings against having sexual intercourse without birth control. As per the group, the same not only raises one's risks of getting HIV, but it also has an adverse effect on the greater world around.

The Tucson, Arizona based non-profit organization has since the year 2009 handed out a total of 450,000 condoms. All these condoms carried messages about endangered species awareness on their wrappers.

It is now being said that it depends totally on the people under the age of 25 years now how the planet as well as the wildlife is burdened. Currently, the planet has more than 3 billion people of this age group and they would only decide if the planet and natural resource base burdens with 8 billion people or 15 billion.

Meanwhile, the group has planned to distribute some 50,000 more Endangered Species Condoms during the holiday season. These condoms would go to people in nightclubs, colleges, activist groups and reproductive health groups in America.

"Endangered Species Condoms are a great way to get a conversation started about how the growing human population affects the wild world, especially animals teetering on the edge of extinction", the population campaign director for the Center Jerry Karnas was quoted as saying.